Design of distributed application elements such as services, transactions, processes, models, modules, and so forth, is a complex task. We need to make sure that the entire program is correctly assembled and that the elements it includes are all correctly composed. While we can rely on various available modeling languages like UML or ABAP, we still need to verify that the design we have come up with is feasible as a whole. Unfortunately, many experienced programmers opt for freely available tools that are not always able to provide the assistance they promise. As a consequence, their codes remain unfinished and developers are forced to add extra features by patching the provided framework. SWFObject is a Flash Player file embedder and JavaScript and PHP object wrapper. It provides a simple API that lets developers easily embed Flash content in web pages in a variety of ways, without requiring Flash authoring or ActionScript knowledge. What's more, the SWFObject API doesn't require a SWF or FLV file to be present on a web server. It will determine the SWF file automatically based on the URL provided in the embed code. SWFObject also doesn't require a SWF file to be downloaded to the user's machine. Why a standalone application? The limitations of the Flash Player's file upload API set some limits to the overall SWFObject functionality. Since uploading files in Flash is slower than uploading them in other HTTP protocol solutions, it is not suitable for uploading some files (e.g. audio or video files). Another reason for installing a dedicated Flash player on the client side is because the file can be checked locally and installed later. In order to do that, Flash needs to be installed on the client side. Also, it is not possible to execute some file types on browsers, like SWF, CSS, and JPEG files. Finally, due to the Flash's file system implementation, it is not possible to use SWFObject to host videos and files. Besides that, SWFObject doesn't provide any server-side functionality. This means that it doesn't have a backend server to allow the file to be processed and ready to be displayed. It is for these reasons that we've chosen SWFObject to make the process of bundling Flash files as easy as possible. Since it is a standalone program, the addition of the required modules is a very simple and straightforward task. Requirements It has been tested on both Mac OS X v10.3 and Windows XP, and it is compatible with these operating systems as
